

Errol Prince
79-A-0513
Otisville Correctional Facility
P.O. BOX 8
Otisville, N.Y. 10963

10/27/'16

Mr. Mujahid Farid
Corretional Association of N.Y.
2090 Adam Clayton Powell Jr. Blvd., #200
New York, N.Y. 10027

RE: Parole Board Proposed Regulations

Dear Mr. Farid:

I was ordered deported decades ago, and have a final order of deportation.

My current status means I have no right or expectation of reassimilation into U.S. society.

To be eligible for release to the custody of Homeland Security/I.C.E. the convict serving a number, to-Life must have a final order (see: 259-I (2)(d) Manual Item 9305.02).

An inmate who was ordered deported by an immigration judge, and has either waived or exhausted all appeals of said order, has a final order.

When a "to - Lifer" with a final order is denied parole the language used mirrors that of non-deportable convicts. The fact that the board can only release "final orders" to the custody of ICE, seems a simple regurgitation of parole board denial language.*

If a deportable Lifer with a final order is not eligible for the only relief the board can give, why go to the board?

It costs the same $120-plus thousand per two-year denial, per convict.

It is my humble opinion based upon the above factors that deportable Lifers with "final orders" at board hearings should be released to I.C.E.

Sincerely,

Errol Prince

*Denial based on risk to the community, and community reintegration, are "contradictory" for an inmate destined for Europe. The same for an inmate destined for the Caribbean.
Ciaprazi v. Evans, 2016 WL4016495