PEOPLE'S CAMPAIGN FOR PAROLE JUSTICE RESPONDS TO FAIR & TIMELY PAROLE ACT PASSING NY SENATE CRIME COMMITTEE

NEW YORK -- Today, the New York State Senate Committee on Crime Victims, Crime and Correction passed the Fair & Timely Parole Act (S.1415) for the first time since the bill's introduction in May 2018. In response, the People's Campaign for Parole Justice's policy and communications associate, TeAna Taylor, released the following statement:

"The New York State Senate today took a great first step to undo the harm that is New York's parole system by passing the Fair & Timely Parole Act (S1415) through the Crime Victims, Crime and Correction Committee.

If signed into law, the Fair & Timely Parole Act would ensure that parole release decisions are based on who incarcerated people are today. It would mean that rehabilitation and redemption are actually taken into account rather than pure vengeance and retribution. It would also mean that people like my father, who will one day go before New York's Parole Board, will actually receive a fair chance at release. Passage of this bill will immediately begin the work of reconnecting families that have for far too long been separated and fractured by mass incarceration. This bill offers a renewed hope for thousands of people who, like me, desperately need their loved ones back home where they can make tremendous contributions.

We look forward to working with legislators and community members across New York State to pass this bill, as well as the Elder Parole bill, as part of the People's Campaign for Parole Justice platform."

Background: The New York State Parole Board routinely denies release to the majority of incarcerated New Yorkers who appear before them based solely on the nature of a person's conviction, all while completely ignoring a person's years or even decades-long transformation. In the last six months (August 2020 - January 2021) the Parole Board granted release to less than 40 percent of all parole-eligible people.

Parole denials disproportionately impact Black and Brown New Yorkers. According to a front page Albany Times Union story published in November 2020, Black and Latinx people are disproportionately denied release when compared to white people going before the Board. This is merely one of the many ways the criminal legal system yields racial biases. The Times Union found that between October 2018 through October 2020, 41 percent of white people were granted parole, compared to 34 percent of Blacks and 33 percent of Hispanics. Their analysis found that if Black and Hispanic people were paroled at the same rates as whites over the last two years alone, there would be 675 fewer people behind bars.

The Fair and Timely Parole Act (S.1415) would provide already parole-eligible people with fairer and more meaningful opportunities for release based on who they are today. While the bill would allow the Parole Board to consider a number of factors when determining someone's release, including the nature of someone's crime, it would ensure that parole release decisions are based on who incarcerated people are today.

The Fair and Timely Parole Act is one of two bills included in the 2021 platform of the People's Campaign for Parole Justice, a grassroots, statewide parole reform campaign with the support of nearly 300 groups across New York State. The Coalition includes the Working Families Party, 1199 SEIU, the NY State Coalition Against Sexual Assault, and the Law Enforcement Action Partnership. The Campaign also supports Elder Parole (S.15), which would allow incarcerated people aged 55 and older who have served 15 or more years an individualized release assessment before the State Parole Board.
